Who killed Peg Cuttino?

Who killed Peg Cuttino? That seems to be the major question in Sumter County these days. It's a question which should have been answered, and according to authorities was answered, four long years ago. For some the answer is William "Junior" Pierce, who was convicted of the murder in 1973. But somehow there are still too many loose ends, too many questions and too many contradictions for that answer to fit comfortably in the minds of many Sumter County residents.

For example, Pierce, in his confession, said he was driving a maroon Pontiac on the day he supposedly came to Sumter, but Earl Williams, a state's witness who identified Pierce as the person he saw at the scene of the crime, says he was in a white car.

Pierce's confession says he encountered Peg after a lunch hour incident in a local drive-in restaurant. Pierce is supposed to have waved a gun at Peg's companions. The incident, if it actually occurred, must have been witnessed by dozens of persons, yet it was never substantiated.

According to the confession, Peg asked Pierce if she could ride with him; something which her mother, friends and the family maid say she never would have done. And there was the little matter of the non-coinciding dates.

Williams, the state's chief witness against Pierce, testified he saw a man whom he said was Pierce in the area where Peg's body was later found, on Saturday, December 19, 1970. Pierce's confession said he killed the girl on Friday, December 18.

Pierce came to trail in what might be understated as "an emotionally charged atmosphere." The case had been in the headlines ever since the girl's disappearance. In the interim between the girl's death and the trial then state representative James Cuttino, the girl's father, introduced a bill to have all school aged children fingerprinted; a move which he said was prompted by his daughter's death.

During the time between the Cuttino girl's murder and Pierce's trial in Kingstree, former Columbia Record police reporter and detective magazine writer, Jack Orr, was busily writing stories on Pierce under various pen names. The stories, titled imaginatively "The Corpse Littered Trial of the Cold-Hearted Killer" and "He's Fresh Out of Stir, He's Mean, He'll Kill," were highly inflammatory in some instances and took great liberties with the facts in others. For example, in one story Orr eliminated the conflict in car colors by changing Earl William's statement to say Williams had seen a maroon car at the scene. In another story Orr had Peg's "badly decomposed body" being identified by "scraps of clothing". The girl's body was remarkably intact and easily identified when it was found.

It was not hard, under the circumstances, to get an indictment and conviction against Pierce in the case. According to one member of the Grand Jury which returned the murder indictment, it was a cut and dried procedure.

"Sheriff Parnell (I. Byrd Parnell, Sumter County sheriff) came before the Grand Jury with a sheaf of papers in his hand. 'I have a signed confession here from William Pierce. He has given us details which only the killer could have known.' He asked if we wanted to read the confession but the foreman told him we would take his word for it," the former Grand Juror said. Whatever Parnell may have had in his hand at the time, it was not a signed confession from Pierce. Pierce's "confession" was never reduced to writing and never signed.

Pierce's story of how the "confession" in the Cuttino murder was obtained from him is intriguing at best and frightening in any case. According to Pierce the confession was far from voluntary.

Pierce was arrested in Appling County, Georgia, on March 8, 1971 in connection with a murder and robbery and was confined by Appling County sheriff J.B. Carter in the county jail at Baxley.

On April 21 SLED agent Olin C. Redd arrived in Baxley to question Pierce regarding the murder of Ann Austell Goodwin, a North Augusta babysitter who had been shot on June 27, 1970.

According to Pierce, Redd talked with him "about an hour" regarding the Goodwin case. Pierce said he told Redd he had no information on the case.

According to Pierce, Carter then requested that Redd go to lunch and give him a chance to talk to Pierce in private. Pierce then said Carter told him, "Bill, why don't you help him with his case." Whereupon Pierce refused. Pierce said the exchange then turned into an argument during which he and Carter

The Death Camp Problem

"Humanitarianism is the expression of stupidity and cowardice."--Adolf Hitler, 1941

A few months ago the Columbia newspapers whipped up their idea of "controversy" by arguing the merits of "humanely" killing cats and dogs via decompression chambers. This is the sort of issue the local dailies thrive on--something on which they can focus "investigative" journalism that offends no one, something on which their editorial writers can pontificate with patriotic self-righteousness and Calvinist absurdity.

But, needless to say, the local dailies missed the real point. Rather than argue over how best to kill pets, it might be more constructive to examine how to control the pet population, thus to vitiate the need for state-run animal "death camps". The government could save itself a bundle if it simply offered, or even required, the neutering of pets--done free, or at a most nominal fee, by veterinarians in the pay of the government. This solution would be far more humane than any method of mass "liquidation" and it would be the moral thing to do.

However "free enterprise" neutering of pets by the local veterinarians is a lucrative racket, and the local newspaper editorial writers would surely condemn "gov'mint spending" which might undercut the vets' oligopoly control of neutering fees. Those fees run from $25 up per animal. And there's no reduction in price if one should bring a stray. No, the vets in Columbia seem to be about as "humane" as a pack of Mafia hit men. They profit from high prices for neutering pets, even if that means hundreds of pets have to be killed every year for lack of anyone to take care of them.

I have a personal interest in this matter because: (1) When I was in school in Connecticut, I worked for a vet, and I know how they make their money, and (2) I've taken five strays in and let them live with me. Well, the newest addition is a beautiful blue-eyed white cat. She caught a skin infection and then too she's pregnant, so I called the ASPCA to see if there are veternarians in Columbia who would give medical attention to her, and the four others, without robbing me blind (I recalled that in Florida, where I used to live, the Humane Society had arrangements to neuter pets free). The result was no result.

"...Some people believe in reincarnation. I'm not one of them. But it would be high poetic justice if all dishonest vets and animal haters returned from the dead in the bodies of stray cats. Then they would do a bit of penance, by damn..."

All the vets in Columbia charge $25. Let's see, that comes to $125 dollars for the five cats. Ah, but now I learn from experience that the local vets don't stick to their minimum rates. I took the white cat with the infection to a Dentsville vet who hemmed and hawed and whined and then said he would only treat her for $35, or else she would surely die. What did this treatment consist of? This vet merely spent a few minutes cleaning the area of the infection, and he gave the cat a shot, and supplied a few pills.

The bill came to more than $40. Which isn't so great for a graduate student who must subsist on a fixed income. It's even worse if one realizes the nature of the rip-off here. Veterinarians are thieves extraordinaire. The one I worked for in Connecticut charged little old ladies $15 for clipping the toenails of their little dogs, and he bottled pet medicine, selling it at exorbitant rates for nonexistent ailments...not too different from the practice of regular medical doctors, come to think of it.

Of course, some dullwit is liable to say, Meadows, you bleeding heart, you fool, if you didn't let these strays move in you wouldn't have all these problems. True, but the animals came to my door starving and in need of shelter. And they're adult cats, not suitable for adoption by people who only want cute little kittens. So what does one do? Does he condemn a stray to die by starvation, or does he send for the animal control people, so the animal dies in decompression chamber? Or does he take the creature in? I choose the latter. You see, human beings domesticated cats and dogs; we made them dependent on us and, in the process, we made them far more fertile than they were in their natural state. Hence we have some responsibilitiy to take care of them.

And I return to the central point--the local government, or the state government if you will--ought to provide the means of neutering pets at little or no cost, as is already done in other locales. This service, properly advertised, would curb the animal population and make unnecessary the obscene slaughter of pets, especially obscene because greedy veterinarians create the conditions responsible for it.

Veterinarians are supposed to be humanitarian almost by definition. And though I've known some good vets in N.Y. and Fla., I've yet to meet one I'd trust in Columbia. Why, I do five times as much charity work as any of these turkeys, and economists don't exactly live by the Hipprocratic Oath. Oh all right...say what you will...I realize it's unchic to have sympathy for animals. I know true bleeding heart liberals who'll bleat and moan into the night on behalf of any oppressed minority one could think of. But mention pets and they cackle and start making remarks reminiscent of Adolf Hitler in his uglier moments. Yet morality is morality, whether applied to homo sapiens or felis domestica.

Some people believe in reincarnation. I'm not one of them. But it would be high poetic justice if all dishonest vets and animal haters returned from the dead in the bodies of stray cats. Then they would do a bit of penance, by damn.

The Guv does it again

"Regrettable" was the word Bob Liming, Governor Edwards' press secretary, used to describe the recent incident in which the governor personally awarded the designation "Palmetto Gentleman" to a Greenville man whom it was later revealed has a record of sex offenses committed on young boys. A bit of an understatement?

Fortunately for the governor, he was on a trade mission to Europe and was "unavailable for comment" concerning the incident. According to Liming, "the award was made in good faith. We are very sorry if we caused anyone embarassment. We were only responding to a request from one of the boys he raised and several people said what a fine, upstanding citizen he was."

The bruhaha began after Edwards journeyed to Greenville to present Edward M. Wharton, a man who had raised 47 foster boys, with the Palmetto Gentleman award. Reporters later interviewed Greenville family court judge James Roper, who told them Wharton was under a restraining order "not to be around little boys."

Roper told the Greenville News that "we have a file on him and it's a bad one. But those files are closed. I've fined him three or four times and locked him up three or four times." A family court probation officer added that "I caught him and arrested him in 1967 for sexually abusing and molesting those boys. We had petitions signed by the boys' parents."

We don't wish to prolong the Govenor's embarassment, but the incident raises a mildly interesting question: What are the qualifications for becoming a Palmetto Gentleman? How much background investigation is done before the designation is awarded?

Obviously, not very much. We can imagine that many past recipients who have until now proudly displayed their plaques on the office wall have since consigned them to the depths of the bottom drawer. The point is probably moot anyway. It's doubtful if anyone will be clamoring for the award in the near future--and we'd be surprised if the governor hands out the honor again during his term.

Then again, as everyone knows, the governor is full of surprises.

Dogs of war

"It's a dog-eat-dog situation." That's how South Carolina's junior senator Fritz Hollings describes the situation in Argentina where he visited last month while on a tour of five Latin American countries. But he also, surprisingly to some, praised the "free government" of Argentina and chastized the Carter administration for doing "too much moralizing" about human rights conditions there.

The speech was strangely reminiscent of another of South Carolina's foot-in-the-mouth politicians, Governor Jim Edwards, who said in August during a trip to South Africa that the situation there had been blown all out of proportion. The right-wing military dictatorship in Argentina has been accused over and over again--and there is evidence to support the accusations--of kidnapping, torturing and murdering thousands of people. The difference between Edward's true colors showing through (excuse the pun) and Holling's is that while Edwards denied he was quoted correctly, Hollings, when he returned, admitted he said it and "meant it."

Hollings said Argentina was in a "state of siege" fighting Marxist guerillas whose record of kidnapping, torturing and murder were, according to Hollings, no better than the government's. "It isn't human rights, it's human survival that they have on their hands," Hollings said. Hollings is chairman of the Senate subcommittee that controls how much money the state department gets, and thus his opinion would carry weight with foreign policy makers in this country.

While Hollings does not deny that kidnapping, torture and murder are practiced on a wide-scale by the government of current president General Jorge Videla, he apparently believes the Marxist presence justifies whatever the government does. What he fails to point out in his defense of Videla is that more often than not the Argentines who disappear are not guerillas, but citizens who openly protest the government's actions. It is not unusual in Argentina to protest one day and disappear the next, never to be heard from again.

"I image some of them did disappear," Hollings said. "I think some of them, by golly, end up with terrorists' groups. When you let the dogs out--and it is the dogs of war--you get overreactions...in a nice, quiet, plushrugged senator's office you and I can talk like what's wrong, what's constitutional and human and what's inhuman and the torture and those kinds of things. I don't think there's any question about it; they've done away with a heckuva lot of them."

"Let's assume there is (torture)...there ain't no orderly way...to subdue Marxism when they're out there fighting and killing and hand-grenading. They're totally broken down. Everybody is talking as if this is normal." Hollings said after his visit he found the government to "be honest and trying to bring order out of chaos."

Apparently Hollings has been in his plushrugged office too long. The implication seems to be that he would advocate the same kind of thing in this country under similar conditions, or is it that he thinks we are somehow different than those poor barbarians down there fighting each other. The fact is that barbarianism is barbarianism no matter who is exercising it.

The good thing about Holling's statements is that we get a better view of exactly where he is coming from. Hollings during this country's slightly leftward tilt (during the sixties and early seventies) carefully orchestrated his image as a progressive. Now that the country is back on the right track, Hollings seems to be back where he belongs.

Live from Bamberg, it's slander and sin

Mouths are watering in some quarters over the prospect of a court trial in the now-famous Russell-Risher feud.

As the Associated Press reported recently, "intense efforts to settle the Russell-Risher feud without airing a lot of legislative linen have been to no avail." Unless an out-of-court settlement is reached at the last moment, the feud between state representative Norma Russell of Lexington and House of Representatives' chief clerk Sylvia Orange Risher will move into open court in Bamberg next week.

The feud first gained the public's attention last winter when Ms. Russell leveled charges in the press that some female employees at the statehouse were hired more on the basis of their physical attributes than on their skills as typists and clerks. Ms. Risher took the remarks personally and threatened to sue but was eventually dissuaded--reportedly by legislative leaders who feared testimony under oath about the sexual activities of some members of the legislature.

The feud was rekindled this summer during the Southern Legislature Conference in Charleston. During a cocktail party, Ms. Russell and Risher had a confrontation, as a result of which Ms. Russell bought a $1.5 million suit, charging that Risher had assaulted and slandered her. Risher responded with a $2 million suit of her own, likewise charging Russell with slander and conspiring to remove Risher from her post as house clerk.

Norma Russell

Those titillated by this sort of thing hope the trial testimony will not be limited to the incident last July but will delve back into Russell's earlier allegations regarding sexual misconduct. Russell has subpoenaed dozens of House members and legislative assistants as witnesses. As the AP puts it: "what they are supposed to have witnessed remains to be seen."

Some observers doubt the subject of sexual promiscuity at the statehouse will be pursued at the trial to any great degree. "Do you really think the judge will let that happen?" one state representative said recently. And there is still speculation that Russell will drop the matter in return for Risher's eventual resignation. But Risher seems determined to fight it out, and she is said to have the backing and support of several powerful legislators in the House (one of them, ex-house speaker and Barnwell Rep. Solomon Blatt, appeared as an attorney for Risher at a pre-trial hearing).

One thing's for sure--if the trial comes off as scheduled, the Bamberg County courthouse will be deluged by reporters, and there will be no shortage of blow-by-blow accounts of the proceedings.

We have one suggestion: why not move the trial to the State Fair - now underway in Columbia? Since the skin shows were toned down some years ago, the Fair's gotten a little dull. This circus might liven things up a bit.

Censorship

Dear Sir:

You might be interested in a current exercise in manipulating the written word from which, clearly, obvious conclusions might be drawn. Last week I wrote to The State, protesting WIS not showing the Richard Pryor show. When the letter was published, it had been mutilated and purged of references to, among other things, the Deity, the cash register, Ft. Jackson, and the Palmetto Gentleman. Strange--a local newspaper, in effect, censors a letter objecting to the same thing in a local TV outfit. We are moving along!

I enclose a copy of the original letter and a copy as printed by The State on Oct. 5.

(Editor's note: The letter as it appeared in the original is printed below. Censored portions have been noted by italics.)

Dear Sir:

I realize, of course, that it would do absolutely no good to address the parochial mentalities at WIS, but I must protest the ridiculous decision not to show the Richard Pryor Show this past Tuesday, a decision obviously made to protect morals and shield delicate sensibilities during the family hour of togetherness, fellowship, prayer, and television viewing. One avenue of protest felt even by the super-moral is through the cash register. I really think that the merchants of Columbia who advertise on WIS should take note of public reaction in this matter.

How can these people at WIS--if they are really so very much concerned with peace and tranquility in the home during the family hour--in conscience show the local news? Several days ago, these people ghoulishly displayed the covered body of a child killed by a school bus; and they glory in reporting in as much detail as possible incidents of child molesting, murder, rape, plane crashes, and other colorful happenings in the area. I almost forgot the Palmetto Gentleman. Should the children in this twice ALL American (or is it thrice?) city be allowed to view such things? In other words WIS should forget about the news along with ignoring one of the creative entertainers of today and show even more reruns than they do of The Brady Bunch, My Three Sons, Gomer Pyle (pyle of what, I won't say), prize fights, explosives at Fort Jackson (28 September), and Billy Graham. These things are safe for all to view. God knows they are safe. And of even greater importance, The Force at WIS knows they are safe.

Son of Censorship

(Editor's note: The letter below was also received from a reader who first tried to have it published in The State. The reference in the first sentence to "my second letter to the editor of your paper" refers to The State.)

Dear Sir:

This is my second letter to the editor of your paper on this subject. This one will probably meet the same fate as the previous letter because once again, I must request that my name be withheld from publication. I do depend on my job for a living and since I enjoy my work with the Department of Highways and Public Transportation, I feel that I must remain anonymous. The problem is that the harrassment of employees is continuing and there seems to be no end to it.

Upon assuming the post of Chief Highway Commissioner, Mr. Cobb has played the role of a man obsessed with the idea that he is the only one who can control (???) the department employees. He refuses to delegate authority to the individual employees. He refuses to delegate authority to the individual employee's supervisors preferring instead to have his "Cobb Scouts" and himself watch the doors in the morning and at lunchtime for late arrivals. He then takes the time to write the tardy employees a letter informing them that they were two minutes late and requests a letter from them explaining their reasons for being late. This letter goes into the employees' permanent personnel record and it is rumored that after three of these letters, you will be terminated. Is all this letter writing (considering the cost of the time of the people involved) really worth two minutes? Could not the individual's supervisor handle this matter? If they couldn't, then maybe the supervisor should be called on the carpet.

The main problem with all of this time business is that no two clocks in the department are exactly alike. You can be two minutes late downstairs, but yet when you return to your own office, you are two minutes early. It seems as though we are all supposed to know what time Mr. Cobb has on his watch and not pay attention to the clocks on the walls. Another part of the problem is the selectivity involved in the reporting of personnel for being late. A black friend of mine was singled out and reported for being two minutes late even though she entered the same door with a group of people. What is even more remarkable is that, even though she was stopped and asked her name, section and had to wait on the elevator, she was only one minute late in getting to her desk. All I can say is she is one fast lady.

As for the idea that you are supposed to be at your desk ready for work five minutes before starting time, I believe that the Wage and Hour Board would require us to be paid for this time. If you are required to be at work early, then you should be paid for this time.

The problem in a nutshell is that the responsible people in the Highway Department are being penalized and treated like kindergarden brats because they occasionally get caught in traffic or have to stop on their way in for some unforeseen reason. I happen to think that our chief commissioner of Highways is being paid a wee bit too much to be a truant officer.

Horizons

Dear Ed Meadows:

What I always loved about you was that you could make sense out of complicated issues--things like economics and return on investment and withholding tax and all those other concepts we must live with now.

I don't want to hurt your feelings because I like you even though we've never met, but I just finally have to say I liked your old column better.

These new ones strike me as un-jelled, a little incomplete. No, the columns are not incomplete, but your thoughts are. Maybe?

Now, you can tell me to keep reading and I'll adjust, and perhaps that's true. But the world has need of ability & expertise in the realm of money and policy.

Please, broaden your horizons if you want to, but every now and then, write one of those other columns that broadens ours.

Alvin Ailey: few turn out for magnificent performances

by Karen Sundstrom

The total attendance at the three performances by the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre Company was less than the seating capacity of the entire Township Auditorium when completely filled. The opening night's performance, on Friday, Oct. 7th, took place in front of an audience of less than 500 people. The Saturday matinee saw nearly 800 attending, and the final performance, Saturday night, was attended by a crowd of nearly 1,500.

What those who did attend saw was the company of acclaimed dancers whose founder and artistic director, Alvin Ailey, is responsible for choreographing and staging the premiere performance of Leonard Bernstein's Mass, performed by the company at the opening of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C. in 1972. This is the company that received twenty-three curtain calls following their performance in Leningrad during a recent tour of the Soviet Union. This is the company of former principal dancer Judith Jamison, "a magnificent black lioness of a woman." This is the company that consistently sells out theatres in New York during their too-infrequent resident seasons in that dance-conscious town. And this is the company that presented a series of breath taking performances here in Columbia: ample evidence of their professionalism and their overwhelming dedication to dance, in the face of that most dreaded theatrical catastrophe, a nearly empty house.

The Ailey Company is unquestionably one of the finest American dance troupes, combining classical ballet technique, contemporary 'modern' dance movement, African and West Indian traditional dances, with the joyous kind of physical self-expression we call jazz. The body of completed works performed by the dancers in repertory and on tour gives continuous demonstration to the scope of their ability. The dancers are black, white, oriental, and every one immensely gifted. It is an interesting company not only for its racial variety, but for the physical and emotional range of the performers.

A powerful and imposing woman like Jamison is complemented by the delicacy of Sara Yarborough and the physically expressed wit of Estelle Spulock. Dudley Williams and Ulysses Dove are dynamic and explosive dancers, but the company also has the more subtle talents of Masazumi Chaya and the dignified, almost detached presence of Mel Tomlinson. Some of the dancers are more assured or accomplished than others, but there is no room for shoddiness, or for the person who gives less than total effort.

The attendance at the opening performance Friday night was a painful disappointment to the members of the Kitani Foundation and the volunteers who were responsible for bringing the company (another in a series of superior quality cultural presentations), and it was a sickening embarressment for those people in the audience who care deeply about the arts in this state. The saddest thing of all is that the performance was seen by only a few relatively lucky people.

A number of other entertainment events took place Friday night (the Roy Clark show, the Columbia Museum Gala, etc.) but first quality dance or theatre or music is so seldom seen in Columbia that one might have hoped that its presence would draw out the hundreds of citizens who loudly complain about 'mediocre' entertainment in the city (like Osceola's own loudmouth Ed Meadows). Apparently these folks had somewhere else to be on Friday, perhaps sitting at home with Donnie and Marie on the tube. I hope that they will either support artistic events of high quality, and groups that bring them, like Kitani Foundation, or shut up about 'mediocre' South Carolina.

Each evening's dance program presented by the company was different, with one exception. "Revelation," one of Ailey's most successful efforts in choreography, concluded all of the programs. Friday night the audience saw several of the most interesting and eclectic parts of the company's repertoire in addition to 'Revelation.' "Night Creatures," the opening selection, is set to a specially commissioned piece of music composed by Duke Ellington in 1955. It was an excellent introduction to the company, combining Ellington's smooth, hot jazz with slow, dreamy passages. The dancers moved through formations that are favorites of Ailey; clustered bodies, extended, reaching arms. A bare stage was covered only by the arrangements of dancers as they wove in and around each other. The second movement was especially good, Estelle Surlock dances with almost liquid movements and is a talented dramatic actress as well. At the conclusion, the sparse audience tried to make up in enthusiasm what they lacked in number.

"Hobo Sapiens" is a recent addition to the repertoire, choreographed by George Faison for Dudley Williams, in much the same way that "Cry" was created for Judith Jamison. It is dance as drama, set to the music of Stevie Wonder and Billy Preston. Williams changes from a basketball-player hotshot (complete with gold satin warm up jacket and basketball) to a streetcorner wino, hustling cigarettes and sleeping in doorways. It is not particularly innovative as dance, but Williams is a moving performer, tremendously skilled in mime, and it might be a more accessible work for people who are unsure of what to appreciate in more 'traditional' dance forms.

"Suite Otis," again set to popular music, this time Otis Redding, was interesting but uneven. The version of the Rolling Stones' "Satisfaction" done by Redding is the only one that comes near the energy and drive of the Stones, but the choreography for this seems uninspired. Five women move and lunge across the stage, but there is little sense of frustration or lack of 'satisfaction.' "Lovers' Prayer" was a great success however, as Marilyn Banks and Milton Myers jitterbugged and grinned their way through the roles of alternately close and distant comic lovers. There were some wonderful bits of stage business when Myers tries to get too friendly with the lady's anatomy and she cuts him cold, but eventually changes her mind.

The finale of each performance is "Revelations," a series of loosely connected dances set to traditional spirituals. It was first performed in 1960, and has become a basic piece of the company. It is completely satisfying. The songs of black people have been reclaimed as expressions of human feeling, and the physical expression of that human pain and joy and faith can be experienced by anyone who watches. Every selection was beautifully performed, but Ulysses Dove and Estelle Spurlock were especially good in their pas de deux to the music of "Fix me Jesus". Dove is a Columbia native and we can be justly proud of him. He is a fine dancer, less of an actor than Williams, but more lyrical and gentle in his movements.

Dance is the most immediate and the most transitory of all the performing

THE BATTLE OF EGO

The Battle of Ego is the heavy-handed, humorless approach to life, obscuring the fundamentally sane qualities of our experience. For over 2500 years, meditation has helped people to discover intelligence, dignity, and compassion—our essential human heritage.

Bridging the gap between ancient buddhist tradition and America today, "The Battle of Ego" course offers a provocative series of lectures and discussions combined with instruction and practice in meditation. It will be taught by senior students of the Ven. Chogyam Trungpa, Rinpoche, author of Cutting Through Spiritual Materialism and President of Naropa Institute.

The Cuttino Murder: Where Pee Wee Gaskins fit in?

cursed at each other and Carter finally left, returning with a deputy and the keys to Pierce's cell.

"I was then handcuffed to the cell bars and was again asked to cooperate; that it was going to put a bad light on Carter's office if I didn't help the officer," Pierce said in a letter to Osceola. Pierce said he again refused and this time Carter burned him several times on the arm with a cigarette.

Shortly after this, according to Pierce, Georgia Bureau of Investigation (GBI) agent William B. Parker came into the cellblock and told Carter it was wrong to scar up a prisoner before he came to trial.

"Parker then told Carter he had a unit which would not leave any tell-tale marks and would make a hog jump over a six foot fence," Pierce said.

Pierce said the unit resembled an aluminum tube with an electric cord on one end. The unit, Pierce said, was plugged into a socket in the cell block and touched to his chest.

"In reflex I kicked out in an effort to get away from the unit and kicked Carter in the stomach: I was struck in the face and Carter ordered the deputy to secure my feet to the cell bars," Pierce said in his letter.

Pierce's feet were then secured to the cell bars and he was again worked over with the electric unit, according to his account. Finally, he says, he agreed to confess to the Goodwin murder and was given a list of details to memorize regarding the crime. Pierce says he related these details to North Augusta Police on the following day.

According to Pierce, Carter then told Redd that he could go ahead and charge Pierce with any crime, and he would see to it that Pierce never got to South Carolina to question his word in a court of law.

Pierce says he was later provided the details of the Cuttino murder and on April 29, 1971 he confessed to the Cuttino murder to Sumter County Sheriff I. Byrd Parnell, SLED chief J.P. Strom and two other SLED agents. Sumter police chief Les Griffin was also present during this time. Pierce contends that none of the men present at this questioning, with the exception of Strom and Redd (who remained in Baxley) were aware of his having been primed with details of the murder.

Pierce's confession omitted some important details of the crime. For one there was evidence the Cuttino girl had been sexually assaulted, something which Pierce never made reference to in his confession. The omission was explained in a note to a police report prepared by Griffin on June 30, 1971.

"Pierce was not questioned concerning the sexual assaults on the body of Peg Cuttino because, Lt. Parker of the GBI and Lt. Redd of SLED advised prior to the questioning of Pierce that he had some sort of mental block against talking about sex offenses, and that he would refuse to talk at all when sex was mentioned by officers questioning him," the note said.

Another detail left out of Pierce's confession was the color of the scarf the Cuttino girl had been wearing and with which she had been strangled. The scarf had been described in newspaper accounts and missing persons reports only as "polka dot." Pierce, in his confession, described the scarf only as "polka dot." At one point, while being questioned under hypnosis, Pierce was asked what color the scarf was; "I don't know. They didn't tell me," Pierce replied.

The police report also indicated it was Redd himself who first focused attention on Pierce as suspect in the Cuttino murder. The report noted that Redd informed Strom on April 29 that he had "determined Pierce was possibly responsible for the death of Peg Cuttino." In addition the report noted Pierce was questioned after Carter and Parker had been briefed on the details of the crime.

Sheriff Carter was described by one Georgia newsman as "a guy not adverse to publicity." Another Georgia law enforcement officer described him as "taking all the credit" in the 18 or so murders Pierce supposedly "confessed to."

Pierce himself was described by one Georgia sheriff as the "confessing kind." "Pierce impressed me as a person who, if you gave him the details, would confess to anything. I don't like to solve my cases that way," Dillon County sheriff Roy Lee said.

And Pierce may indeed have been the "confessing kind." At least one case to which he allegedly confessed has never been prosecuted; that of the Kathy Jo Anderson murder. On the date the Lexington teenager was killed Pierce was in Macon, Georgia and had spent the night there.

Regarding Carter's statement that Pierce would never reach trial in South Carolina, Parker, in a 1973 interview, said he was surprised Pierce came to trial on the Cuttino murder. Indeed the fact that Pierce came to trial at all on the case seems to be largely a result of his own filing of a motion for a speedy trial.

South Carolina authorities made a notably poor attempt to bolster Pierce's alleged confession with hard physical evidence. For example Pierce claimed he left his maroon Pontiac at McGowan Motors in Swainsboro, Georgia. Redd said he stayed in Swainsboro for "30 or 40 minutes" attempting to find the car but was unsuccessful.

"He told us he left it there; it wasn't there, hadn't been there," Redd said in Pierce's appeal hearing in March of 1973. It was a contention disputed by personnel at McGowan's.

"The car was here from about the end of December to the middle of February," an employee at McGowan's said. The car, he said, was then sold at auction to a used car dealer in Reidsville, Georgia who kept it on his lot until the middle of May when he sold it to a man named J.C. Cressman. All this the SLED agents failed to unearth.

Pierce also allegedly told officers he had exchanged the bumper jack used to strike the Cuttino girl for $3.25 worth of gas at a Wrens, Georgia gas station.

"I always wondered why the South Carolina agents apparently did not check this out," Parker said. Parker said it would have been easy since Wrens only has a dozen or so service stations.

Even some South Carolina officers were bothered by the confession Pierce allegedly made.

"There was a conference held afterward in which it was decided to throw some parts of it out and keep other parts. They eliminated the parts which didn't fit and kept everything else. I was bothered by it because there were too many holes and there wasn't much done to support the verbal confession. It was pretty poor police work," one Sumter county officer who declined to be identified told Osceola.

Pierce was also refused a lie detector test by authorities even though some 36 suspects in the Cuttino case had been given polygraph exams. Pierce, however, did undergo a polygraph exam independently administered at the request of his defense attorneys. The resusts were inconclusive.

The inconclusive results, according to a source close to the case, were due to Pierce's extremely unemotional response to the questioning. The flat response, the source said, could have come from Pierce's ability to lie well or his having been told to confess and provided with details of the crime while in a state such as drugged, hypnotized or under extreme emotional distress. One textbook cites, as one of several reasons for inconclusive polygraph results, "letting the suspect learn too much about the offense before the test." The text book Modern Criminal Investigation explained if a subject was questioned thoroughly regarding the details of a crime before the test, it would be difficult for an examiner to later evoke the strong emotional response which usually accompanies a first intrusion on certain knowledge.

During his trial this Spring on charges of murdering Silas Barnwell Yates, convicted murderer Pee Wee Gaskins surprised the packed courtroom by saying he had killed the Cuttino girl and a black girl named Clyde on orders of a law enforcement officer.

Gaskins' admissions were immediately dismissed by law enforcement officers connected with the Cuttino investigation.

"The man who killed Peg Cuttino is in jail in Georgia and I can go to sleep on that," Sheriff Parnell told newsmen the day after the courtroom statement. Most officials thought Gaskins was seeking publicity and discounted the possibility that he could have committed the crime. But is it so far-fetched as to be impossible? The facts indicate otherwise.

Early in the Cuttino investigation Gaskins himself became a suspect but was eliminated because he had been working that day. According to police, Gaskins' supervisor, Roy Herrington, accounted for Gaskins' whereabouts on the day Peg disappeared.

Herrington, however, indicated to Osceola that Gaskins' alibi was not so airtight as police indicated.

"I told them he punched in on time and punched out on time. What he did in between I have no idea," Herrington said. Herrington was unaware of Gaskins' actions because Gaskins had been sent on an outside roofing job on the day Peg disappeared.

That job, according to records, was on the roof of the Sumter YMCA which was then under construction and directly across the street from Willow Lane School, Peg's destination on the day she disappeared. It was also where Peg's trail ended as far as the authorities were concerned.

Police have discounted statements by Carrie Lenoir, Burnett Plowden, Jerry Artrip and Edward Carolina that they all saw the Cuttino girl on either the evening of the 18th or the afternoon of the 19th. The last sighting of the girl accepted by police were reports from men working on the YMCA building who saw her walking. The sightings by Lenoir, Plowden, Carolina and the Artrip boy, who was a calssmate of Peg's, do have an interesting thread in common however.

The four all claim they saw the girl at different times, places and with different people in what they have alternately described as a "white," "dirty white," "beige or tan" "Comet or Falcon." According to Sumter County personal property tax records, Gaskins owned a 1960 white Mercury Comet at the time the Cuttino girl disappeared.

And there are other intriguing facts which make it difficult to entirely dismiss Gaskins' story.

For one thing, Gaskins apparently had an attraction for young girls. Two of Gaskins' alledged victims, Patty Alsbrooks and Janice Kirby, were both 17 at the time of their disappearence. The two disappeared just one month before the Cuttino girl was murdered. Another 13 year old, Kim Ghelkins, was allegedly killed by Gaskins in the same manner as the Cuttino girl. In 1964 Gaskins was charged with statuatory rape and in 1966 was sentenced for unlawful carnal knowledge of a child. At least three of his female victims were under 18.

One link between Gaskins and the Cuttino girl was forged by one of his own victims, Jesse Ruth Logan Judy, who was an acquaintance of both Peg and Gaskins.

According to the Judy woman's mother, Mrs. Maddie Logan, Peg Cuttino visited the Judy girl several times while the family lived in Sumter.

"I remember one time she came to the house to see my daughter, who was in the bathroom at the time. She went in and spoke to her through the door and then left," Logan said. Logan was sure that the girl was Peg Cuttino. At the time of Peg's death the Judy girl would have been 16. Peg was known for being a mature girl so it is possible the story is not entirely without credibility.

Mrs. Logan also said the subject of Gaskins' participation in the Cuttino murder came up several years before the Yates trial.

"One night Jesse Ruth told me Gaskins was outside our trailer waiting to kill her. I told her, Jesse Ruth, don't be silly, he's not going to kill anyone. And she said, Momma, you don't know that man. He's killed before. He killed that Alsbrooks girl, the Kirby girl and the Cuttino girl. I asked her how she knew that, and she said Gaskins had told her," Logan said. In addition, several other persons close to Gaskins say he admitted to the Cuttino killing prior to taking the stand in Newberry.

"He couldn't possibly have been seeking publicity then, could he?" one source said.

Gaskins' contention was that he had been forced into killing the Cuttino girl and Martha Ann (Clyde) Dicks because of a criminal charge which was hanging over his head at the time. Osceola has

by Rick Sebak

There was a lot to like in the recent USC production of Aristophanes' "The Birds." Nancy Myers McCauley designed hula-hoop clouds which were suspended over center stage and which allowed Director James A. Patterson to stage some marvelously effective entrances and exits through the ceiling. Hinda Schreiber's wonderful and colorful costumes effectively suggested feathers and beaks (although the different bird species looked disappointingly alike) as well as Olympian splendor.

The new Longstreet Theatre proved itself an appropriate and impressive aviary for the production. The green-blue seats and carpet weren't really celestial, but an array of outlying platforms allowed perching birds to nestle among the audience. The sunken Longstreet stage will nearly always demand an arena arrangement, and Patterson's blocking took advantage of some of the possibilities provided by the various areas, platforms, and passageways.

Unfortunately, there was also much to dislike in the same production. The play itself, a personal favorite, deserves better treatment. Good mountings of the comedy don't have to rely on cheap tricks like actors screaming "JOKE!" when a pun or laugh-line is difficult to deliver. Director Patterson credits himself with this adaptation (the program lists no sources, and I found this version relying heavily on Walter Kerr's translation), and the original music and lyrics were written by Christopher Reynolds. There seemed to be little, if any, attempt made to incorporate the songs and dances into some kind of unity with the comedy itself. There were two separate productions: Aristophanes' classic and a set of musical numbers.

The 414 B.C. comedy is one of Aristophanes' least topical and most produced plays. It concerns two Athenian men who decide to flee the world of humans to find a new world among the birds. They soon encounter Epops, the king of the birds and a former human himself, who is quickly and easily convinced of their merit. The supposedly smarter of the two men, Pisthetairos, convinces Epops and the birds to accept a wild birdbrained scheme whereby the birds will gain dominance over both men and the gods.

In attempting to escape the vile world of men, Pisthetairos merely spreads the commercialism, hypocrisy, and power greed of his former world into the skies. The play ends with the apparent victory of Pisthetairos and the birds over the worlds above and below, and no one seems to care that footloose Pisthetairos has become a tyrant, a strange fate for the anarchist who walked on stage at the start of the play.

The replacement of Aristophanes' satiric jabs at Athenian life is always a challenge in any production of this play. Patterson managed to make one truly effective stab at current quacks: the Real Estate Salesman set up familiar signs for land developments with local airborne names (Treetop Apartments, Quail Hollow, et al.). I think Aristophanes would have laughed.

There was however no other special style or infectious energy in this production. Patterson and Reynolds obviously weren't daffy and daring enough to make the whole thing a crazy show of silliness, and the few times that the play's energy level seemed to be building, it was always destroyed by the deadening intrusion of a musical number.

The theatre itself initially appeared ready for some spectacular flying effects, but none were used. The little platforms prepared me for some fancy trapeze tricks, but the bird-actors were constantly earthbound. During one song, a row of fine-feathered friends sat around the stage cross-legged, and extremely unbirdlike position.

USC production of Aristophanes' "The Birds"

> "...There seemed to be little, if any, attempt made to incorporate the songs and dances into some kind of unity with the comedy itself..."

The acting overall left a lot to be desired. Stanley Rhann Ashley was bug-eyed and frantic as Pisthetairos, but no memorable character emerged from his efforts. Scott Hompton was a bit more successful as the footsore friend Euelpides, but his size and smart attitude made it hard to believe that he was the "brawn" of this duo.

There were few standouts in the supporting cast. Ann McDaniel was very close to my conception of how Juno must have been, and I enjoyed her performance. Thaddeus Williams was forceful as the leader of the songbirds, and Marti Suber was correctly pontifical as the Cardinal. I liked Robert Shields as the Prophet (even though his wig made him look like Kaye Ballard) and Glenn Rawls as the First Messenger, but it would be difficult to single out any others from the large cast.

Cloudcuckooland (the name given to Pisthetairos' sky kingdom) can be a spectacular place to visit in any theatre, but this recent USC creation was a disappointment. Despite some evidence of design and technical ingenuity, the overall show was much too often boring.

University theatre should be of an unusually high calibre; the people involved in these productions are probably professionals-in-training if not professionals-in-fact. There was no evidence of any unusual theatrical imagination or comic creativity in this show. The Department of Theatre and Speech will certainly have to do better if it expects to be considered a worthwhile and stimulating training ground.

been unable to locate any official charges outstanding against Gaskins at the time.

One year later, however, on October 28, 1971, Gaskins was arrested on charges of grand theft of an auto and possession of dynamite. Gaskins was indicted on both charges the following week and reportedly the cases were ready to go to trial when they were mysteriously dropped.

According to Parnell, the car theft charges were dropped because the officials could not prove Gaskins had stolen the vehicle, even though the warrant charges he was in the process of stripping it when apprehended. The dynamite charge, according to Parnell, was dropped because the dynamite was found in a house which Gaskins had rented at one time but had since moved out of.

Osceola has learned that the dynamite was found in the same house where Gaskins was stripping the auto. It was found, according to one source close to the investigation, as police searched the premises after arresting Gaskins on the auto theft charge. The place of the offense on both warrants is listed as Route 1, Sumter. Both warrants were signed the same day--October 28, 1971.

Osceola has obtained additional information that during an off-the-stand discussion of the Cuttino killing, Gaskins related details of the crime which were generally not known. Details which Pierce himself had not related.

"I believe Gaskins did know what color the girl's scarf was, and he related other details which were not in the newspaper accounts," one source close to the investigation said.

Currently there is a tight lid clamped on interviews with death row prisoners. Osceola tried unsuccessfully to obtain an interview with Gaskins in an attempt to clear up some of the questions regarding his admissions. Without talking to Gaskins many of the questions still remain; especially the main question: "Who killed Peg Cuttino?"

Whether that question will ever be answered to the satisfaction of all concerned is, itself, an open question. As one investigator put it, "After seven years it's a frustrating and cold, cold trail."

arts. The medium is not something used by the body, like the musical instrument or the paintbrush; it is the body itself. When it is over nothing remains but a fading image in the mind. We have damn few chances to see robust, exciting American dance companies in this town, and those people who slam this town for its lack of quality entertainment owe an apology to the Kitani Foundation and the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre, and to Columbia. Most of all they owe it to themselves to support opportunities like this in the future.

Cinema

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3223 Two Notch Road, 786-0790.

This week's X-rated fare includes "Kinky Ladies of Bourbon Street" and "Midnight Desires," beginning continuous runs at 11 a.m.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790.

"Devious Girls" and "Felines" are featured as this week's X-rated duo, beginning continuous runs at 11 a.m.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011.

"Piece of the Action", a spin-off of "Uptown Saturday Night" and "Let's Do it Again," begins at two Columbia theatres this weekend. It stars Bill Cosby and Sidney Portier and its rated PG. Shows start at 2, 4:30, 7 and 9:30 p.m. (that's weekends only--shows Monday thru Friday are at 7 and 9:30 p.m. only).

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

Tentatively scheduled is "The Front", starring Woody Allen. The movie satirizes, to some extent at least, the days of the "red scare" when the acting community was called on the carpet by congressional committees to answer questions about their loyalties. It features Woody in a different kind of role about what was then a serious subject. Rated PG.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

"Annie Hall," another Woody Allen movie in which he stars along with Diane Keaton, returns to Columbia. It's rated PG and shows begin at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. on weekends, with just the two late shows during the week.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"Star Wars" continues on, and probably on, at 2, 4:30, 7 and 9:30 p.m. weekends. (No matinees during the week). It's rated PG.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"The Spy Who Loved Me," the tenth in the James Bond series, moves from Spring Valley. It stars Roger Moore (as 007) and Barbara Bach, and it's rated PG. Shows at 2, 4:30, 7 and 9:30 on weekends (just the two late shows on weekdays).

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 765-0665.

"Kentucky Fried Movie" continues a second week at two Columbia theatres. It's touted as a polished "Groove Tube." That's probably true to some extent and the film does have its moments. It shows at 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10 and 9 p.m. Rated R.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"Spirit of the Beehive" opens in the Screening Room this weekend at 1, 3, 5, 7 and 9 p.m. on weekends and 7 and 9 p.m. on weekdays. The New York Times called it "the film we may never see." Now you can see it. Rated PG, it stars Ana Torrent.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"Silver Streak" in its 43rd week. Rated PG, shows start at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. (Weekends only - no matinees during the week.)

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square, Downtown, 765-9506.

The X-rated version of "Cinderella" continues for a third week.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1229 Main Street, 779-0826.

"The Lincoln Conspiracy," a tall-tale of the events surrounding Lincoln's assassination, continues for a second week at this downtown location. Bradford Dillman and John Anderson star and it's rated PG. Showtimes are 2:10, 4, 5:50, 7:40 and 9:30 p.m.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 765-0282.

"Rabid," starring porn star Marilyn Chambers ("Behind the Green Door"), begins its Columbia run downtown at 3:15, 5:15, 7:15 and 9:15 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday (only the two late shows during the week). This horror flick is rated R.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 765-9358.

"Return to Boggey Creek" makes its Columbia debut this weekend. It's the sequel to the first "Boggey Creek" movie and it's rated PG. Shows begin at 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10 and 9 p.m.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

"A Piece of the Action," a spin-off of "Uptown Saturday Night" and "Let's Do It Again," begins its Columbia run this weekend at 2, 4:30, 7 and 9:30 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday (just the two late shows on weekdays). It stars Bill Cosby and Sidney Portier and it's rated PG.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

"You Light Up My Life" moves from Theatre I to Theatre II and continues. During the week shows are at 7 and 9 p.m. with a 3 and 5 o'clock show added on the weekends. Rated PG.

SPRING VALLEY I THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

"Star Wars" continues, but this will be the last weekend you can hear it in Dolby Stereo. Shows are at 1:30, 4, 6:30 and 9 p.m. Rated PG.

SPRING VALLEY II THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

"The Deep," starring Jackie "let us be a t-shirt" Bisset and Robert Shaw, returns to Columbia for one week only at 1:30, 4, 6:30 and 9 p.m. The reviews have been generally bad for this one. Rated PG.

SPRING VALLEY III THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

"Kentucky Fried Movie" plays here also at 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. Rated R and in the tradition of the "Groove Tube."

SPRING VALLEY IV THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

Encore Theatre features "My Darling Clementine", starring Victor Mature and Henry Fonda, thru Saturday and "Night At The Opera" (Marx Brothers), beginning Sunday. Shows at 1, 3:30, 6 and 8:30 p.m.

Exhibits

John Chumley: "Melting Snow"

The Columbia Museum of Art will open its first major exhibition of the season with "The World of John Chumley." Admission is free and open to the public and viewing hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday thru Saturday and 2 to 6 p.m on Sundays. The exhibition will open on September 30th and will run until November 6th and will include 24 realists' watercolors, temperas and oils. More information on the showing can be obtained by calling Cany Baker at 799-2810 (Columbia).

There will be Hungry Artists exhibit and sale in the Elephant Room at the Carolina Coliseum on Saturday, October 22nd from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Admission is free and open to the public.

Theatre

The Warehouse Theatre in Greenville will present Noel Coward's brilliant comedy, "Private Lives," for nine performances beginning October 13th and running thru October 29th on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week. The performances will begin each evening at 8 p.m. and the theatre is located adjacent to Memorial Auditorium in downtown Greenville. Tickets are priced at $3 for adults and $2 for students and group rates are available. For reservations or more information contact the theatre at 235-6948 (Greenville).
